Methodology

The NPR/Kaiser/Kennedy School Congressional Election Tracking Survey is part of an ongoing project of National Public Radio, the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation, and Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government. Representatives of the three sponsors worked together to develop the survey questionnaire and to analyze the results, with NPR maintaining sole editorial control over its broadcasts on the surveys.

The project team includes:

From NPR: Marcus D. Rosenbaum, Senior Editor/Special Projects.

From the Kaiser Family Foundation: Drew Altman, President and Chief Executive Officer; Matt James, Senior Vice President of Media and Public Education and Executive Director of kaisernetwork.org; Mollyann Brodie, Vice President, Director of Public Opinion and Media Research; and Elizabeth Hamel, Research Associate.

From the Kennedy School: Robert J. Blendon, a Harvard University professor who holds joint appointments in the School of Public Health and the Kennedy School of Government; Stephen R. Pelletier, Research Coordinator for the Harvard Opinion Research Program; and John M. Benson, Managing Director of the Harvard Opinion Research Program

The results of this project are based on a nationwide telephone survey conducted between October 23 and October 27, 2002, among a representative sample of 1,007 respondents 18 years of age or older. The survey work was conducted by ICR/International Communications Research. For results based on the total sample (n=1,007) there is 95% confidence that the error attributed to sampling and other random effects is +/- 3.2 percentage points.

Respondents were asked three questions in order to determine if they could be classified as likely voters:

1. Are you currently registered to vote?
2. Are you almost certain to vote, will you probably vote, are the chances 50-50, or don't you think you will vote in the November election for U.S. Congress for your district?
3. Did you vote in the 2000 election for president between Al Gore and George W. Bush?

Likely voters were those who answered yes to Questions 1 and 3, and answered almost certain or probably to Question 2. Sixty-four percent of the entire sample is likely voters. For results based on the likely voter sample (n=641) the margin of sampling error is 4.1 percentage points.
